A King County public engagement program in the King County Auditor's Office

Auditor's Office Mission

Through objective and independent audits and services, we promote and improve performance, accountability, and transparency in King County government.

Auditor's Office Vision

Our work is of the highest quality and integrity resulting in significant improvements in accountability, performance, and efficiency in county government, and it promotes public trust.

The King County Auditor's Office was created in 1969 by the King County Home Rule Charter as an independent agency within the legislative branch of county government. Under the provisions of the charter, the County Auditor is appointed by the Metropolitan King County Council. The King County Code contains policies and administrative rules for the Auditor's Office.

The King County Auditor's Office provides oversight of county government through independent audits and other studies regarding the performance and efficiency of agencies and programs, compliance with mandates, and integrity of financial management systems. The office reports the results of each audit or study to the Metropolitan King County Council.

The King County Auditor's Office performs its work in accordance with applicable Government Auditing Standards.

Countywide Community Forums Round 8 Report

Attached for your review is the report on the findings of the eighth round of Countywide Community Forums (CCF) as established under Ordinance 15896 on the King County Budget: Achieving Sustainability Together. The questions were meant to inform the 2012 budget process and to provide insight for Metro Transit (Metro) on the views of King County residents. Although the budget was passed early, it is worth mentioning that the priorities of the 1,440 residents who chose to participate in the CCF process appear to match those of the King County Council, selecting increased efficiency and productivity over more drastic cuts to address possible budget shortfall, agreeing that services or programs should be reduced or eliminated on a case-by-case basis based on the priorities set by the County Council and the King County Strategic Plan, and supporting the current course of action regarding the permanent budget reserve.

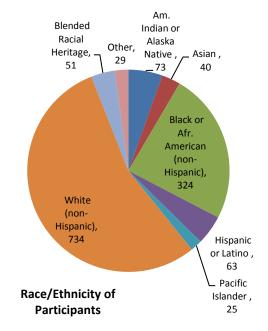

It is also worth noting that a large majority of respondents thought that Metro offers an essential service, but that 28% of respondents felt that public transportation is either less available or less convenient to them, even though Metro has thus far avoided any significant service reductions. Generally, respondents supported solutions that are already being implemented by Metro as part of their 9-Point Plan, although a slight plurality disagreed with the decision to eliminate Metro's ride free area in downtown Seattle.

For every round of forums, the independent coordinators have increased their outreach to different communities. For this round, they implemented an incentive program to encourage charitable organizations to engage their members and recognized the following organizations with grants ranging from $1,250 to $250: Compass Housing Alliance, Mary's Place, MLK FAME Community Center, Issaquah Food and Clothing Bank, Real Change, Valley Cities Counseling & Consultation, Woodland Park Zoo, Alliance of People with disAbilities, Brettler Family Place/Solid Ground, Multi-Service Center, and the White Center Community Development Association. As a result, the responses reflect the views of participants who don't often engage in the public process, such as homeless or formerly homeless men and women, low-income residents, and people with disabilities.

CB:CS:lo Attachment Between September 19 and October 24, 2011, 1,440 King County residents completed a survey on the King County budget with a special emphasis on the Metro Transit budget. Large forums were held at Compass Housing, Mary's Place, Brettler Place, MLK FAME Community Center, University of Washington and Real Change, capturing the views of communities that are often underrepresented in civic life. About half of the surveys were taken on line.

Fifty-eight percent of the respondents were female with just over half of the respondents in each of the following demographic categories: White (breakdown by race/ethnicity on the right), over 50, with 20 years or more of residence in King County, and having completed four or more years of college. Thirty-eight percent hailed from Seattle and 5% from unincorporated King County. King County Council Districts 2 and 4 had the strongest representation with 19 and 18%, followed by District 3, with 12%. Forty-three percent were satisfied to extremely satisfied with King County institutions, while 18% were unsatisfied to extremely unsatisfied (the rest were neutral or did not respond).

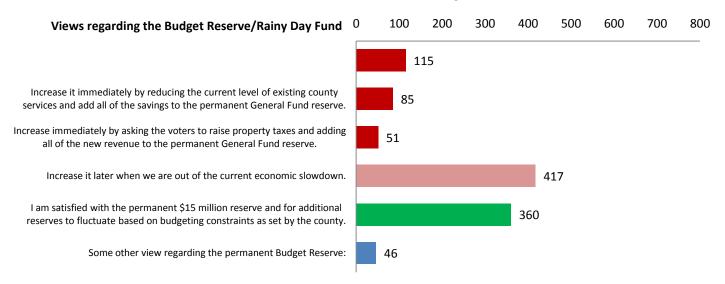

When asked whether any King County recent budget cut impacted them personally, a third of the respondents felt no direct impact (graph below). Of those who did, public transportation was identified as the highest impact, with notes specifying lack or reduction of Metro Transit services or hike in bus fare. The second highest impact was higher fees for County services. While few respondents identified what services they were referring to, some mentioned higher car licensing fees. In a parallel set of questions, fewer respondents (18%) said that no one they knew had been impacted by King County budget cuts, while 42% thought that, for someone they knew, social or health services were less available and 38% that public transportation was less available or convenient. Here again, specific concerns about bus route modifications or higher fare were mentioned, but few specifics were noted about social or health services issue. Thus, it is unclear whether respondents were thinking about county services.

When given a set of choices, a plurality of the respondents (32%) favored "increase efficiency and productivity" as the best way for King County to achieve a sustainable budget and avoid cutting services. If there is a need to cut services, a plurality (30%) indicated that services should be reduced or eliminated on a case-by-case basis, based on priorities set by the County Council and County Executive.

Respondents did not feel that the budget reserve should be adjusted in the short term. Twenty-nine percent supported increasing it later when we are out of the current economic slowdown (in pink below) and 25% were satisfied with the current $15 million reserve (in green below).

Respondents were divided on what would make King County more efficient and productive. A quarter of them picked each of the proposed recommendations 1) evaluate the cost benefit of outsourcing more functions; 2) enhance the use of new technology and business practices; 3) make wider use of performance audits. The remaining quarter either abstained or proposed a different solution, such as cutting staff or salaries, incentives for staff to perform, or more or no outsourcing.

In a series of questions about the Metro Transit budget, respondents indicated they had taken 14,000 bus trips over the last 30 days, although 62% either took no trip or did not respond. When asked whether Metro Transit was an essential service that should be funded, at least in part, by taxpayers, respondents overwhelmingly said "yes" (in green below), but mostly because it enhances public mobility and therefore encourages economic activity.

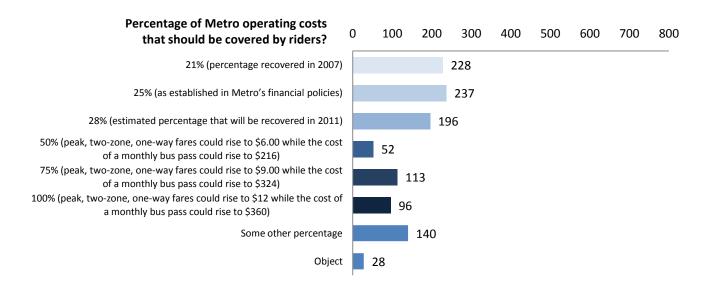

Forty-five percent disagreed and 38% agreed with the recent decision to eliminate the Metro Ride Free Zone in downtown Seattle by October 2012.

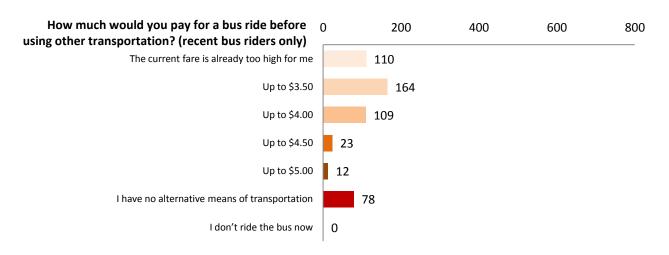

When asked to pick their top three choices among a set list of ideas for Metro Transit to cut costs and/or increase performance, respondents chose as their top three picks, in decreasing order: 1) increase the use of performance measures and outcomes; 2) collectively bargain with the unions to reduce wages, salaries or benefits; and 3) adopt additional new procedures that reduce fare evasion. Numbers of responses to all the options are included in the graph below.

Although 16% opposed any reduction in services, the preferred choice for a quarter of the respondents among a list of possible additional measures to reduce expenses is to convert the lowest productivity fixed-route services to lower cost alternative services, such as vanpools, taxi-scrip or community vans. There was no strong preference on how to help reduce Metro's dependence on the sales tax. Nineteen percent chose to increase bus fares, seventeen percent opposed any new taxes, fees, or other revenue sources to help Metro Transit, and 12% favored increasing the percentage of existing property tax currently going to Metro Transit. A strong plurality (46%) said that a percentage of the operating cost similar to what was or is currently done (21 to 28%) is what should be covered by riders. Nineteen percent thought it should be higher and 10% offered another percentage, often ranging from 0 to 10%. The following graph includes the complete breakdown of answers.

There were divergent views on how much a subset of 511 respondents who currently ride the bus would be willing to pay for a Metro bus ride. While 15% have no alternative means of transportation (in red below), 22% said the current fare is already too high for them.

Raw results from the complete survey are included in the next section, along with the total number of responses for each option and the percentages based on the total number of responses (1,440).
